Opinions of this kind might be quoted at any length. They are not calculated to sooth Bismarck's resentment at being treated as a dying man. There is, in fact, little chance of his ubmission to the emperor for better or worse, and any plan of reconcilia-tion with this end in view will surely miscarry. If the emperor's kind mes sage should result in soothing the prince and inducing him to moderate the bitterness of his attacks on the government no more can be expected. The official newspapers here, however, affect to expect more.

In view of this line of comment it is not surprising to find Bismarck's dubious whether the approaches to a reconciliation which are mown to have been offered by Chancellor Von Caprivi are not inspired partly by a desire to weaken Bis-marck's criticisms of the government's policy as it is about to be developed in According to the last dispatches from Kissengen the text of Bismarck's reply to the emperor's message remains unpublished. Its general tenor is said to indicate that efforts to reconcile the two men will be futile. A large crowd had sathered near the officers, but as no trouble was thought probable while the military filled the streets, only four gendarme were at hand to preserve order. The head of the column had hardly passed the captain-general when a box thrown from the crowd. It struck near the captain-general, and exploded with tremendous fcree. The crowd was thrown into confusion and the soldiers broke from the lines. A few seconds later another bomb came from the crowd. It struck among the staff officers and exploded almost directly under the captain-general's horse. The captain-general was thrown to the ground and his horse, with its legs shattered, rolled over beside him. Gen. Castellivi, chiefof-staff, also fell wounded from his horse. A soldier of the civic guard was killed instantly and five others were injured so severely by pieces of shell that they will probably die.

The march was stopped and most of general's last order as he was carried to a house near by was that the parade should be continued.
